Subject: Jake's Bar Mitzvah
Date: Fri, Nov 4, 2011 2:24 pm

Wow, after speaking with Rachel who has just ripped me a new ass for attempting to hurt Jake by accommodating a party with his friends, I guess somehow you guys have turned this into something I am doing to hurt my son. As nothing could be further from the truth I guess this all needs to be clarified further, which from your last emails stating it was ok, I did not think was necessary. Initially, Jill and Lisa wanted to know what day we were planning Jake's Bar Mitzvah, we told them 11/11/11, a date Jake picked and he loved the 1's thing as he was born on 1/1, blah. We were then asked to change that date to the current day the day after thanksgiving to accommodate Lisa Jill and Pam's Thanksgiving Trip to Florida. Candice did not like that date initially as she knew her father would not be able to make it but she consented to that to have Mollie, Max, Carly etc. be there instead of her dad. I stated that it was a horrible day as most people would not be able to make it on the day after thanksgiving as it was thanksgiving and most of them would be gone as they are year after year, I stated that but was ignored. But we thought on the day after some people would cut short their family trips etc. to be there and were working to try and make it a great day of friends and family, so we tried. Unfortunately, when we started calling to see who would make it, instead of waiting for replies as Rachel and Jill needed the info asap, we were a bit more than shocked when his 6 BEST FRIENDS and their families (about 25 People) would not be in attend I was mortified for Jake. As we found out today that more people would be no shows, so far over 30 and have not yet heard back from a few, it seemed like it would be disastrous to have a party and dance floor etc. and expenses when no one, especially ALL of his BEST FRIENDS, would be there except mostly you guys. So I thought what would be best would be to separate the two events to make jake have the best of both worlds with his family and friends but that somehow has turned into I am doing this in some sort of vindictive way against Jake and well you can ask Rachel she has claimed were my "ulterior motives". I am not sure what is prompting that reaction and why you are having Rachel call me to be your voice pieces instead of picking up the phone but I am stunned. So, if you thinks that having a party without jakes friends for jake, on his day to be with his friends is best, I respectfully disagree and would think of other alternatives that will satisfy everyone, please feel free to call me and don't bother sending me polite emails while having Rachel call me screaming and hang up on me. Thanks

Subject: RE: Jake's Bar Mitzvah

Thanks Lisa. Just so you understand, about 30% of respondents to the Thanksgiving Day/Bar Mitzvah idea cannot come so far from who we have spoken with and this includes his 5 best friends and their families who will all be out of town with their families or on long planned vacations. I am not sure anyone would want their Bar Mitzvah without their best friends and does not seem like it would be that fun with no kids dancing etc. When you guys changed the date from 11/11/11 to try and accommodate you, Jill and Pam's holiday vacation plans we prayed for a better reply than that (like 5% no shows), although we knew most of the St. Andrews folks left for the holiday but hoped they could change their plans by a day or so. However, since that did not work, it does appear better that we do two events, one service/dinner (although I think Ted is doing Thanksgiving Dinner) or something for the family that will be in town and then one later party where his friends can all be there, wish it could have worked out better but that is the reality and it just seems like the only thing but we are open to suggestions. We can probably still change the party dance to another date without much cost or loss of any deposits or a paintball party or whatever and keep the service for those who want to attend and family in town on thanksgiving, scraping the party that night, we are just trying to sort out how to do that.

Dear All,
After speaking with Rachel yesterday Candice & I are planning on cancelling the big bar mitzvah idea and doing a small service on the planned date with you guys and a small affordable pizza party after at the bowling alley as Jill recommended. Part of the reason is that when we shifted the date from 1/1/11 to accommodate our family to the new date it fell on Thanksgiving and now almost all of his very dear and best friends will not be attending as they are out of town and really who wants a bar mitzvah without their friends. We were thinking of doing a party for his friends a few weeks later at our house without all the expenses of the formal party, which will cut the costs drastically and conserve the funds which is already stressing dad. Thanks will let you know details.
